

THE BANK COMMITTEE.—The Committee of Congress now in this city investigating the affairs of the United States Bank, are busily occupied with their labors. It is said they have declined nearly all invitations to festive parties, in order not to be diverted from their object. Individually, they excite the curiosity of the public considerably. A crowd greets them in front of the Bank as they proceed to their room, all anxious to get a sight of such distinguished characters as John Quincy Adams, Mr. McDuffie, Colonel Johnson, &c. &c. We trust for the good of the country at large, that their investigations and report will be favorable to the Bank.
