

The Bank Committee, we understand, are about closing their labours, to proceed to Washington, finding it impossible to examine the details of the business in time to make a definite report at this session of Congress. Many reports of discoveries, said to have been made by the committee are in circulation, but they are preposterous in the extreme. Nothing in the slightest degree discreditable to the institution has been elicited. The great object in the appointment of the committee, appears clearly to be, to prevent a re-charter at this Congress. We trust this will be defeated by a prompt decision of the question on the return of the committee.

The various unfounded rumors circulated by stock-jobbers for speculating purposes, have an injurious effect on the bank. The stock every day rises and falls, as these venal traders are able to influence the public. The people demand that the matter be put to rest at once; no possible good can result from a postponement of the question until Congress again convenes, but on the contrary, immense evil will result from a continuation of the present uncertain state of affairs.
