

POSTSCRIPT.

In the House of Representatives on Friday, Mr' M'DUFFIE presented the counter report of the minority of the committee appointed to investigate the proceedings of the bank of the U. S. The National Intelligencer states that it is from the pen of Mr. M'D. but has the assent of Messrs Adams and Watmough. Mr. A. announced, however, that he should submit a separate report to the house, on his own behalf, on Monday (this day).

On the presentation of the report in the house, Mr. CAMBRELENG enquired of Mr. McDuffie whether the report had appended to it the replies of the president of the bank to the last set of interrogatories presented to him on the part of the committee.

Mr. McDUFFIE replying in the affirmative,

Mr. CAMBRELING stated that, in order to enable the president of the bank to answer these interrogatories more at his leisure, they had been left in his hands by the committee on their departure from Philadelphia. On looking over the replies which the President had made, Mr. C perceived that many of them were not replies to the queries which had been put by the committee. In others, the President had denied facts which the committee had stated on the ground of the statements submitted by the bank to government, from year to year; and had answered questions which Mr. C. had never asked of him. In consequence of this, Mr. C. took this opportunity to give notice that he should feel it his duty to propound to the President other queries, for the purpose of ascertaining who had been right and who wrong in the matter.

Had that course been pursued in the committee which Mr. C. had proposed and desired, and the President had been permitted to give verbal replies to those interrogatories, and his answers been taken down, Mr. C. would have had an opportunity to have prevented all misunderstanding. But he had waived this advantage and consented, for the convenience of the President, to leave the written queries with him: and had little anticipated that that gentleman would have taken advantage of the waiver.
