

The large pamphlet of Documents accompanying Judge Clayton's Bank Report and printed by order of Congress, is in our hands. It embraces a part only of the returns from the Bank, the whole of which will, we trust, soon appear. We particularly desire to see extant the correspondence between that institution, and the late Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Ingham. All the testimony now produced sustains the able and sincere report of Mr. Adams; on the whole it reflects great credit upon the President and board of directors. We observe that the proposal of the editor of the Washington Telegraph for a loan to enable him to execute the printing for Congress, was made through the Hon. Joseph Hemphill, and that, in his letter to Mr. Hemphill, he expressed himself thus. "It may be proper to add, that no accommodation given by the Bank will induce me to alter, in any respect, the course which my paper has pursued in relation to it." Mr. Biddle, in his answer to Mr. Hemphill, says—

"I will submit the proposal to the Board at their next meeting. In the mean time, I can only say that it will receive from them a kind and respectful consideration, as a matter of business, without looking to the past or the future. The bank is glad to have friends from conviction; but seeks none from interest. For myself, I love the freedom of the press too much to complain of its occasional injustice to me; and if the loan be made, it shall be with a perfect understanding—to be put into the note if necessary—that the borrower is to speak his mind about the Bank just as freely as he did before, which I take to be ample room and verge enough."
