

Judge Clayton, vs. John Quincy Adams.—The last Milledgeville Journal contains the long-threatened Reply of Judge Clayton to the Counter-Report of the Bank Committee of Investigation, presented by Mr. Adams to the House of Representatives, at the last session of Congress, as a rejoinder to the Report of the majority of that committee. It would fill eleven or twelve columns of our paper, and is exceedingly vituperative and bitter, painting Mr. Adams as a hypocrite, a fool and a liar, the object of pity to his friends and of disgust to his enemies! You have overshot the mark, Judge Clayton, depend upon it. You may paint an Ass, and write the name of John Q. Adams underneath; but we are much mistaken, nevertheless, if ninety-nine out of a hundred, even in Georgia, would not discover a much greater likeness to that stupid and obstinate animal in your image, than in that of the individual whom you thus attempt to caricature. Such overcharged pictures recoil upon him who draws them. They are like the gun of Hudibras, which,

“ Whether aim'd at duck or plover,

“ Shoots wide, and knocks its owner over.”
