

The Convention.—It is truly animating to the advocates of correct principles, to witness the extent of the convention now in session in our city, and the good feelings which prevail among the members of it. There is in attendance a larger number of persons than was ever before assembled on a similar occasion, in this country; among whom there is a vast amount of the best talents in the country, and the kind feelings, the good understanding, and the gentlemanly deportment of the members are such as are calculated to inspire delight in the mind of every friend to the cause in which they are engaged. They are not men, who attach any undue importance to external appearance, and desire to make a display to no purpose, but it contains the bone and sinew of worth, integrity & talent; who move when occasion calls for it, and when they do so it is in accordance with the feelings of the people, and consequently with an effect which bears down all opposition.

The good effects resulting from the assembling of the Convention to make a nomination is seen and felt by all who have witnessed its proceedings, and will no doubt be seen and felt throughout the
