

The Indians.—The coalition writers are endeavoring to get up an excitement against the removal of the Creek and Cherokee Indians. We would advise them to re-peruse Mr. Barbour's report to Congress on this subject. The policy of the government rests upon the rights of the States, and the interests and wants of the Indian tribes. It has been advocated by the two previous administrations, and will be maintained by all enlightened philanthropists, who are acquainted with the Indian character, and have labored to civilize and christianize these sons of the forest. It will be opposed by traders, runaway negroes, refugee whitemen, and half breeds who desire to retain the Indian title, for purposes of individual speculation. If to these we add the trading politicians, we have the materials of the anti-emigrating society. Their object is to operate upon the sensibility of the religious and benevolent citizens of New England, and to make it another agent for the propagation of sectional feeling and local prejudice. The work will go on; and this, like the other anties of the day, this excitement will find its quietus in the intelligence of those upon whose sympathies it is intended to operate.—U. States Telegraph.
