

In commenting upon some article of the Richmond Whig, touching the late report of Judge Clayton from the joint committee on the state of the republic, in reference to the federal powers of promoting manufactures, and carrying on Internal Improvement, the National Advocate, with many other of like expressions, thus observes :—

“ Do the people of Georgia, or their representatives in the state legislature seriously believe that the people of the northern portion of the confederacy are affected by such language? Do they suppose the great state of Pennsylvania will sacrifice the very vitality of her prosperity, and divert the sources of her present wealth and comfort into other channels through fear of the menaces of SUCH A STATE AS GEORGIA? If they do, it is high time the North should speak and tell them, we laugh at their threats and despise their bravadoes.”—Wash. News.
