

The following information, from the Journal of the 12th instant, cannot but be interesting to the reader.—The acquisition of all the territory within the chartered limits of the state, with a view to its improvement, and the permanent establishment of its civil distinctions, cannot be too early or strongly urged upon the consideration of Congress :

We have great pleasure in informing our readers that there is now a good prospect of getting rid of the Cherokee Indians. Within a short time past, the President and the Secretary of War, have professed to have come to the determination to use all the means within their control to remove them to other lands. A treaty was making, at the date of our information, with that portion of the nation that has already gone west of the Mississippi, by which powerful inducements are to be held out to the remainder of the nation, still in Georgia, to emigrate. Very little doubt is entertained, that the terms which will be proposed to them will be accepted.

Nothing can be more desirable, than that they should be removed speedily. And so they will, if the authorities at Washington will but follow the advice of their Agent, Col. McKinney:—"Take them kindly by the hand, and tell them they must go." This is the only course; and it is certainly a strong evidence of obstinacy, and perverseness that it was not admitted to be so by the President, long before Col. McKinney told him of it. Gov. Troup urged it upon him often enough; but without effect.

Fifty thousand dollars have been appropriated, for the purpose of carrying into effect the agreement of 1802, as regards the Cherokee Indians.
