

It is reported on the authority of a gentleman direct from Tennessee, that two Commissioners in the service of the General Government and acting under its authority, are now executing their commission within the Cherokee nation, in endeavouring to excite a spirit of emigration to the West. The effort is represented, as being not only unpopular, but hazardous in the extreme, their lives having been threatened and poles erected on which to exhibit their heads. The Agent, Col. Hugh Montgomery, it is also stated, has received instructions from the War Department, to accompany them, and to protect them against the execution of the threat by which they are menaced. How far the Agent will be disposed to lend his official sanction to the encouragement of such a disposition, is a matter of much doubt, if we may infer from his apology to the Indians of the unpleasantness of his duty which usually accompanies his exertions. Should the measure be successful, which is highly uncertain, the names of those disposed to emigrate, will hereafter be enrolled, and measures taken for their removal.
